

BIG ROCKET POISED FOR SKYWARD TRIP

Inventor Hopes Eventually to Reach Moon.

Ayer, Mass.—The big brother of the sky rocket with which you need to celebrate Fourth of July is poised here for one of the most extraordinary flights in history.

Some time in the not far distant future, if all goes well, this 12-foot steel projectile will rise with incredible speed from a tower at Camp Devens on the outskirts of this quiet little town and nose its way skyward, seeking the secrets of outer space.

The rocket's noisy zoom into space will mark the latest step in a series of unusual experiments started twenty years ago by Dr. Robert H. Goddard, Clark university scientist.

Popular fame has drawn a seemingly insatiable hankering for news of his work in the rather remote atmosphere of a laboratory.

To Record Air Data.

Even the faintest vibrations that he has no lunar aspirations have failed to destroy the general belief that he hopes eventually to send his strange contraption to the moon.

Those who toy most fervently with the fascinating idea like to think that there will be a man inside the huge steel tube as it rises, and that 220,000 or more miles to its fabled destination. No one appears to have given much thought to the rather knotty problem of how the man would get back to earth, even he had completed his journey.

But Professor Goddard protests that the paramount object of his present experimentation at present is to obtain accurate data on meteorological conditions at various altitudes.

His big rocket is equipped with numerous devices for recording such information—devices which are intended to return to earth with the aid of a parachute attached to the tail.

Test Rocket Noisy.

Doctor Goddard has kept secret the exact method by which his projectile is propelled. It is understood, however, that the general idea is for a series of times of controlled explosion the rocket on its way, with a fresh blast expelling its flight as the power begins to wane.

At Auburn, near Worcester, several months ago, Doctor Goddard's test rocket, rocket No. 1, was fired. The test flight was planned with the outcome of the test flight in mind. The explosion alarmed residents of the countryside.

It was suggested by the fearful that recording devices carried by the rocket, in returning to earth, might make a noise. Doctor Goddard argued that the object which returned to the ground invariably landed within a short distance from the point from which the rocket had been loosed. Finally he compromised by transferring his experimental station to Camp Devens.
